ABSTRACT

In the light of widening the political events in the Arab countries in general and in the light of essential transformations witnessed by the Arabic regimes especially the republic ones which were established at the end of the Arabian Revolutions in the last century in comparison to the Royal regimes which were more stable than the Republic ones , because of that all there is a bad need to study the differences between these two kinds of regimes through Study in the relationships between two countries which Completely different from each other in all a aspects , Politically and society ,they are Libya and morocco.

Despite the studies which deals with the History of Arabian Maghreb but there are only few searchers who study the relationships among the Arabian Maghreb countries in general and the Libyan – Moroccan's relationships in particular ; especially during the period (1969-1984) which Was full of many important events on the level of Arab homeland in general and Arabian Maghreb in particular.

The seventies of the last century considers as one of the worst period of time regarding the relationships between Libya and morocco on top of these events the coup of the first of September which took place in Libya in 1969.

This Thesis consists of four chapter ,in addition to the conclusion which consists of the most important results that we realized during our sturdy to the nature of the relationship between Libya and morocco .

The first chapter consists of a summary for the development of the political attitude in both countries before 1969 where it has the title "the political developments in Libya until 1969" and also " the political developments in morocco until 1969" that is the first section of the chapter and the second one , the third section of the first chapter deals with The nature of the relationships between Libya and morocco until 1969 which were very good and strong .

The second chapter of the thesis has been titled as " Libyan – Moroccan's relationship between 1969-1973 "which three section into three sections ,these sections deal with the Moroccan attitude towards the first of September revolution in 1969 in Libya ,this chapter also consists of the Libyan attitude towards the repeated military coups in Morocco , as well as the Moroccan attitude towards the effort of union between Libya and Tunis in 1973.

The third chapter which has title "the effects of both Palestinian and Sahara cases on the Libyan –Morocco's relationship from 1974 to 1981, this chapter includes two sections ,The first section deals with Sahara case and how it became the reason behind the vibration of the relations between the two countries whether in good or bad way m, the second section deals with the Palestinian case which considered one of the most important case in the modern history since it has the great effect on the Libyan –Moroccan's relationships ,this section also deals with the attitude of both countries regarding the vital case and the policy that both countries has adopted regarding October war and the agreement of Camp David.

The fourth chapter which has title " Arabian-African union " consists of three section deal with most important factors that led to the formation of union between these two countries, the second section of the fourth chapter deals with the agreement between the two countries and the articles of this agreement and how they had been approved by each country .

The third section has the title "Arabian and international attitudes towards this agreement " and how many countries agreed or disagreed on it .

The conclusion includes the most important conclusion that we realized during our study.
